According to an announcement from the offices of the Metropolitan Opera Company, the special matinee of "Zaza," which was to have been given to-day, has been postponed because of the indisposition of Miss Geraldine Farrar, who is still suffering from a cold. Miss Farrar has been ill since last Friday, when she was unable to appear in "Carmen" and the role was taken by Miss Florence Easton.

Flood Breaks Down as He Enters Court

Patrolman, on Trial for Killing 16-Year-Old Boy, Shows First Sign of Emotion; Wife Also Sobs

Birthday Party Delayed
Police Lieutenant Testifies Defendant Admitted Firing in Chase on Roof

The trial of Patrolman Cornelius J. Flood, charged with the murder of James Cushing, sixteen years old, was continued yesterday before Judge Charles C. Nott and a jury.

When Flood was led across the Bridge of Sighs and into Part V of General Sessions he was weeping. This was the first sign of emotion the accused patrolman had shown since his trial began Monday.

With Policeman Robert A. O'Brien, at one time attached to the West Forty-seventh Street station, Flood was indicted by the January extraordinary grand jury several weeks ago. Both have been held in the Tombs.

Flood's wife, tall and pretty, appeared in the Criminal Courts Building yesterday with relatives of the defendant. In a rear seat she listened to the testimony offered by the prosecution and frequently tears coursed down her cheeks. Late in the afternoon, when Flood was led back to the Tombs, she waved a wet handkerchief to him through the wire-netted corridor leading back to the Bridge of Sighs.

Birthday Celebration Postponed
Before she left the building, Mrs. Flood told a reporter for The Tribune that March 15 was a birthday for both of her children, Katherine, five, and Bernard, seven.

"We expected to celebrate to-day," said Mrs. Flood, "but now I guess we will have to postpone it until after my husband is acquitted. And there is no doubt in my mind that he will be acquitted."

William J. Fallon, counsel for the defense, made it plain yesterday that he would make the wide discrepancies in the statements made by the witnesses in the present trial and those given to Assistant District Attorney John S. Joyce and a grand jury in 1918, just a day after the killing of Cushing, the basis for his plea for an acquittal.

Mr. Fallon announced that he would call as one of the principal witnesses for the defense Mr. Joyce, and probably would put others on the stand to whom the witnesses called by Mr. Whitman yesterday and on Monday had made statements in July, 1918, when the alleged murder occurred.

Woman Tells of Finding Body
Mrs. Alice Smith Kennedy, the twenty-year-old mother of two children, who made such a sturdy witness for the prosecution Monday, resumed the stand yesterday under cross-examination and came through a withering line of involved questions with her story of the shooting unshaken.

Mrs. Margaret Flynn, a resident of the house at 530 West Fifth Street, on the roof of which young Cushing was killed, told the jury that she was clearing off her dining room table when she heard three shots on the roof of her house. She told of going to the roof and finding Cushing's body, face downward. She said that she did not suspect that he was dead and asked the boy if he would like a drink. He did not answer, and then she noticed that a blood spot was spreading on the back of his shirt.

Victim Shot in the Back
Police Lieutenant Dondero, attached to the detective division of the West Forty-seventh Street station, at the time of the murder, told the jury yesterday that he had made an investigation immediately after the shooting and had found Cushing's body lying on the roof of 540 West Fifth Street.

The lieutenant identified the shirt, trousers and cap worn by the boy, and said that upon making an examination of the body later in the station house he had found a wound in the victim's back and one just beneath his collarbone, where, he presumed, the bullet had come out.

Said Shooting Was Accident
Dondero asked Flood whether he had discharged his revolver, and when the latter replied that he had, he asked him whether he was aware that he had shot a boy. Flood replied that he had no knowledge of this, according to the witness. Both Flood and O'Brien declared that they did not know that Cushing was shot. Dondero said.

Under cross-examination the lieutenant told Mr. Fallon that Flood had told him that while stepping out on the roof of the station house his revolver exploded unexpectedly, but that he had never shot at the boys intentionally. O'Brien told Lieutenant Dondero that he fired one shot after Flood's gun went off because he thought he was being attacked.

Sergeant Augustus Hanberg, who was acting as a guard at the West Forty-seventh Street station on the day Cushing was shot, testified to several blotter entries regarding the case. The trial will be continued to-day.

Child Bride Held After Threat to Leap Off Bridge
Sixteen-Year-Old Girl Says Husband Is in Jail; Unidentified Man Jumps to Death

Tena Zeboli, sixteen years old, of 1009 Thirty-third Street, Brooklyn, was arrested near the Brooklyn Bridge yesterday morning after she had confessed to Sergeant Edward Siegenthaler, of the Police Street Station, Brooklyn, that she intended ending her life by a leap into the water.

Several hours after her arrest an unidentified man jumped into the East River from the Brooklyn Bridge, near the Brooklyn shore. A lighter passed over his body just as it struck the water. He was killed.

Sergeant Siegenthaler's attention was attracted by the suspicious actions of the Zeboli girl. He questioned her and she said: "My parents have been keeping me home and object to my leaving the house."

ried last October and he is now serving a term at the Elmira Reformatory for forgery, she said.

The body of the man who leaped from the Brooklyn Bridge was towed to shore by Captain Eugene Patton, in command of Engineering Boat No. 1, of the War Department. The man was about fifty years old, five feet eight inches in height and weighed about 140 pounds. He wore brown trousers, a gray coat and gray overcoat. The bridge is more than 100 feet above the water at the point where the man jumped. An envelope in his pocket bore the name "Vratchek" and the address 434 East Seventieth Street.

Children Seek To Reconcile The Stillmans

shortly before the banker filed his suit. The attempt of the children to effect a reconciliation between their parents was revealed yesterday by friends of the estranged couple, who also provide the information that the Stillmans have severed friendly relations with their father and has become the devoted partisan of Mrs. Stillman. Anne, however, remains hopeful of success as a mediator and continues to see her parents. She is attending a New England finishing school.

There were literally battalions of reporters and photographers swarming in the corridors of the Court house at White Plains yesterday at the hour scheduled for a hearing on Mrs. Stillman's motions. All that occurred was a three-minute conversation between John F. Brennan, a lawyer representing Mrs. Stillman, and Justice Morschauer.

"I am ready to go on with this case," he said.

Mr. Brennan, laughing, said he was present in connection with the Smith-Jones case.

Court Brings in Stillman Name
"You're speaking of the Stillman versus Stillman matter?" questioned the justice, with a trace of severity in his tones. Mr. Brennan admitted this to be so and then explained that counsel for Mrs. Stillman had empowered him to speak for her also.

"We wish an indefinite postponement," went on Mr. Brennan. One of the motions have been argued and required Mr. Stillman to show cause why he should not be examined as to his financial condition. The other asked for $10,000 a month alimony pending trial of the suit and $25,000 counsel fees.

The justice agreed to the indefinite postponement and Mr. Brennan returned to New York. Arriving at Grand Central Terminal he entered a telephone booth for the purpose, it is understood, of informing other counsel in conference representing both sides of the arrangement made at White Plains.

'It's a Lie,' Says Beauvais, Guide, of Stillman Charge
(Copyright, 1921, by the United Press.)
MONTREAL, March 15.—(United Press.)—The French-Indian guide named James A. Stillman's divorce suit, was found to-day by the United Press in a suburb of Montreal.

When discovered he was busy engaged in clipping the stories of the Stillman divorce case from the New York newspapers.

"It's a lie!" he declared, angrily tossing the clippings on the floor. He made a sweeping denial of all the charges alleged to have been made by the New York financial, connecting his name with the case.

"This matter has been in court behind closed doors since last November," Beauvais said emphatically, speaking without a trace of an accent. "It was made public at last so that Mr. Stillman's charges implicating me could be given the light and refuted."

Beauvais was very indignant at having been referred to in the newspapers as an Indian and a half-breed. He considers himself a French Canadian. Beauvais does not look like an Indian. He has polished manners and a smooth, courteous manner. He is well dressed, and would not be out of place in any drawing room. He seemed to have been fully informed of all the details of the case.

"I don't want any publicity," he said. "Fred Beauvais, the guide, is dead."

He said that he was through with the case.

Fugitive Naval Officer Under Arrest at Sea

Lieut. Robb, Who Escaped From Bay Ridge Reservation While Awaiting Verdict of Trial, Is Captured

Recognized by Stevedore
Man Accused of $2,000 Embezzlement Enlisted as Master Mate-at-Arms

A wireless received yesterday from the steamship Cambria, en route to a Belgian port, announced that Lieutenant Leon H. Robb, who escaped from the navy receiving ship in Bay Ridge February 26, while awaiting the outcome of a courts martial investigation, had been serving on the ship as master-mate-at-arms and had been taken into custody. Robb's arrest resulted from his being recognized by a stevedore in Hoboken, when he enlisted there in the Army Transport Service, after his escape.

Robb, who was under arrest in the receiving ship at Bay Ridge, made his escape while awaiting the verdict of a navy court martial which tried him in the Brooklyn navy yard on charges of embezzling more than $2,000 from a fund of the battleship Tennessee. Robb managed to slip by his guard and walked out of the gate at the navy reservation, receiving the salute of the guard there as he passed.

After leaving Bay Ridge, it is said, Robb spent several days in Manhattan. He is said to have registered at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, as R. H. Roberts. After remaining there three days, it is alleged that he went to Pier 44, Hoboken, the base of the Army Transport Service, and passing himself off as a civilian, enlisted in the service as master mate-at-arms, using the name R. H. Roberts.

On the pier, however, he was recognized by a stevedore, who had known Robb when he was in the navy service and who had later read of his trial and escape. Robb pretended not to know the stevedore. By the time the stevedore had reported seeing Robb to the officer of the day and that report had been sent to the Naval Intelligence office at Whitehall Street, the steamship Cambria, to which Robb had been assigned, had sailed. A description was wireless immediately to the ship and Robb was placed in custody on board the Cambria.

Organist's Slayer Faces Swift Trial and Execution

Prosecutor Plans Indictment of Negro Friday; Funeral of Mrs. Wilson Attended by 2,000 Friends

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., March 15.—Prosecutor Joseph E. Stricker said to-day that an indictment against George Washington Knight, confessed slayer of Mrs. Edith Marshall Wilson, Perth Amboy organist, will be returned Friday. The trial will be held at an early date and that Knight probably will go to the electric chair within a month.

"The prosecution in this case has evidence that is invulnerable," he said. "I hope to get the trial date fixed Thursday of this week. I feel gratified beyond expression at the arrest of the negro. He has confessed completely. Chief Tonnerson and the Perth Amboy police are to be commended and congratulated upon the intelligent and efficient manner in which they handled this job."

Other officials expressed themselves to-day as being eager to show an example to the negro. He has confessed the case of Mrs. Wilson's murder. Fearing that an attempt might be made to lynch the negro, extra guards are being kept on duty at the county jail here.

Mrs. Sarah Strum, who owns the saloon at State and Commerce streets, Perth Amboy, where Knight said he had killed his girl, surrendered to the police to-day. Acting Recorder Stephen F. Somogyi, at Perth Amboy, held her in $5,000 bail for the grand jury on a charge of selling liquor without a license.

The funeral service for Mrs. Wilson was held at 3 o'clock this afternoon at her home, 78 Center Street, Perth Amboy. The service was conducted by the Rev. H. E. Hatchman, pastor of the Baptist Church, of which Mrs. Wilson was a member, and the Rev. Wilbur Westcott, pastor of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she was organist. Mrs. Wilson's mother, who does not know the real circumstances under which her daughter met her death, bore up bravely at the service. Both ministers paid tribute to the character of Mrs. Wilson and to her usefulness in the community.

The body was taken to Arlington, Mass., Mrs. Wilson's former home.

Gibbs Predicts Harding Call
TORONTO, March 15.—Sir Philip Gibbs, English journalist, said in an address here to-day that a conference he had had with President Harding in Washington had convinced him that the United States would call a world council as its initial step toward getting into the European settlement.

Sir Philip expressed the opinion that the presence of Herbert Hoover and Charles E. Hughes in the Harding cabinet made it a strong body.

Rich Merchant Kills Girl and Self on Liner

as his wife was not his wife, and under the circumstances the passport for both had been procured by fraud.

Captain Penrice, master of the Vasari, therefore had no alternative, and kept the couple aboard ship during the two weeks the Vasari was unloading and taking on cargo in Buenos Ayres.

The Vasari called at Rio de Janeiro, leaving that port March 2, and it is assumed that the same precautions against their landing in Brazil were taken by the Brazilian government, as the couple remained aboard throughout the stop in Rio.

Ship Calls at Barbados
The next call of the Vasari was at Barbados, the last stop she would make before coming into New York, and it is assumed that Campagna realized that he would not be permitted to land there, as his passport had not been valid for entry at any British port.

It is thought that he became desperate when confronted with the fact that he would have to come to New York and face his family and creditors, and rather than do this he killed his companion and himself.

According to fruit merchants who knew Campagna, he had been having a good time in the white light district for several months before his departure for the Argentine. Some of the neighboring fruit dealers said that he bought a new motor car about a month before he sailed and closed up his business. He informed them, they said, that he planned to go to Italy.

Campagna's place of business was at 166 West Street and he lived shortly before his departure for South America with his family at 613 Seventy-seventh Street, Brooklyn.

When a representative of The Tribune informed the family of the murder and suicide aboard the Vasari, Mrs. Campagna said that the man was her husband and that the woman he killed was probably Miss Vivian Bressel, with whom she learned he had fled to Buenos Ayres.

Leaves Wife and Children
According to the family, Campagna was forty-six years old, but looked much younger. He had five children, three of whom are married. The other two, Virginia, twenty, and Charles, fifteen, live at the Seventy-seventh Street home.

It was said there last night that Campagna went to his place of business early on the morning of January 8 and none of his family had seen him again. Miss Virginia said she had a birthday party at her home, and sought her father to have him attend, but she was unable to find him. Later she learned that he had sailed on the Vasari with a young woman not his wife, and enlisted the aid of the State Department to have him sent back to this country.

After the Vasari had sailed Campagna's chauffeur told the family, they said, that the merchant had taken with him as his wife a Miss Vivian Bressel, twenty-three years old, whom he first met two years ago at Twenty-seventh Street and Fourth Avenue. Campagna, according to the chauffeur, had been attentive to the girl for about two years.
